

Every day, 25,000 people, most of them children like this little girl, die of hunger worldwide. In fact, by the time you finish reading this poster, six more children will have starved to death.

But as horrific as this is, the bad news is it's getting worse. Since 2006, a number of factors, including rising gas prices, unseasonable droughts, and the conversion of land from growing food to growing biofuels, has resulted in a dramatic increase in food prices.

And while for many of us, this means a higher bill at the grocery store, for much of the world it's the difference between life and death.

got food?
